Fact Sheet about the Revised 1990 Census Boundaries and Counts

Between decennial censuses the Census Bureau conducts the Boundary and Annexation Survey (BAS) to collect detailed information on any changes to the legal boundaries of governmental units due to annexations, detachments, mergers, and so forth.

The Census Bureau recognized the legal boundaries in effect on January 1, 1990 for tabulating the 1990 census. The Census Bureau has received responses to the BAS conducted in 1991 and 1992 that show changes to the January 1, 1990 legal boundaries for some governmental units. These changes should have been recognized for tabulating the 1990 census, but were not. In these situations, the Census Bureau has corrected the 1990 census records to reflect the certified legal boundary in effect on January 1, 1990.

To provide the most accurate population and housing unit counts for the 1990 census, the Census Bureau has reviewed the 1990 census records in conjunction with the revised boundaries to ensure that individual living quarters and their associated population, if any, are assigned to the correct governmental unit. The enclosed statement of the revised census counts reflects the corrections that resulted from this review.
